Your PC is slow and I have read that memory issues can cause this. Go to control panel, click system, advanced system settings, and click the memory tab. If you see that you have low memory than use the program PC doctor (free download at to get your computer back to full speed. You may have non-technical problems with your computer. For example, it may be sluggish. This is not always a sign of a technical problem. There are a few steps you can do to make your computer more responsive. 1. Check your background running applications. Open Task Manager (search for it in the start menu) and look at the list of running applications. If you see programs running in the background that you do not need, then close them. 2. Do you have a problem with your printer or scanner? Make sure they are turned on and that the ink cartridge is full. It may be that you are running out of ink. 3. Make sure your computer is plugged in and that it has power. 4. Are you running a virus or spyware? Please see this page for advice on how to remove spyware. Note that spyware does not always cause your computer to become slow. 5. Make sure that you have enough memory (RAM) to run your programs. Your computer may be trying to use more memory than it has. 6. Before you upgrade to a new version of Windows, you may want to try the compatibility mode. If you can not access the Windows options menu, then you may have a hardware problem. 7. Another suggestion: If you are using Vista, keep Windows Update turned off. Wait until the next automatic update is available. 8. If you still have problems, it may be time to replace your computer. If none of the tips help, try running a virus scanner. This free software is able to help to remove spyware from your computer and viruses from your computer.
