Known spray nozzles typically comprise an elongate pipe or shaft having at its lower end a discharge tip and an air-intake nozzle at its upper end. In operation, a chemical solution is poured into the hollow shaft and the nozzle is then moved along the field to be sprayed. Spray nozzles of this kind are particularly used in the area of farming, where they are mounted on walking or tractor drawn equipment such as sprayers, or on farm vehicles such as sprayers, for example in front of a sprayer boom. It is also known to mount the spray nozzle on a hand held unit such as a pistol-shaped sprayer for manual use. It has been found that a discharge nozzle of this kind, i.e. with a relatively large diameter discharge pipe for a flow of liquid, can be very effective. However, it has also been found that the discharge of liquid can be affected by weather conditions. Rain can cause clogging and/or stalling of the nozzle. Cold temperature also affects the flow rate of the liquid. It has been proposed in the past to provide a flow of gas through the hollow shaft and discharge pipe of a spray nozzle to reduce the viscosity of the liquid passing ca3bfb1094
