Photoshop CS3's default workspace is set for the tablet mode, though any of the four available layouts can be chosen by clicking the icon in the upper left of the workspace. The options palette opens when you select an image file. The following sections explain how to select an image, open an image, create a new file, and edit an image. Opening an image The first step in editing an image is to open it in the program. The image file can be opened from your hard drive via your computer's file manager or from a CD or disk. Once it's opened, you can display it in the program window or apply the image to another image, modify it, or do a number of other things. Before opening an image, ensure that you have the layer tools (which are covered in Chapter 6) and the Pathfinder panel tools (covered in Chapter 8) installed and enabled. Creating a new image file You can create a new image file from scratch by choosing File⇒New. A new image is created in Photoshop with a default format selected. (In CS2, the selected format is PNG, but it's all JPEG in CS3.) Figure 5-1 shows the New Image dialog box. Figure 5-1: Create a new image file to work with. You may also want to create a copy of an existing image. To create a copy, choose File⇒Duplicate. Editing an existing image To open an existing image, first locate the image file on your hard drive. Figure 5-2 shows the Layers panel and Photoshop. Figure 5-2: Locate the image file you want to work with. If you want to make a duplicate of the image, open the original file; if you want to edit the image, open the file and prepare to work. Selecting and clicking an image in Photoshop To select an image file to open or edit, select it in the Layers panel. Then click the layer in the Layers panel to make the selected layer active. You can click directly in the image window to select an area of the image. If you haven't loaded any additional images or you're just not sure where in the image you want to work, you can simply double-click an empty area of the image window to activate the layer. . it is important to obtain quick relief of the symptoms without any side effects. The results of the present study indicate that Lavandula angustifolia oil cream exerted a significant analgesic effect ($P < 0.05$). The results of the present study are in conformity with the results of studies conducted by Haacke et al. The present study has some limitations which include the number of volunteers in each group which was small to make any generalization for all the groups. Lack of blinding of the volunteers is another limitation of the present study and place of creams or gels on buccal mucosa cannot be controlled. Furthermore, studies with different concentrations of LEO can be conducted to check the analgesic effect of LEO, which would have better quality of the study. LEO is unstable in oil because of light and moisture and thus a control group, cream without LEO, should be included in the study. CONCLUSION The results of the present study indicate that both Lavandula angustifolia and lignocaine are effective for the management of pain associated with controlled diode laser therapy for patients with genital warts and combination of LEO and 5% lignocaine gel has maximum analgesic effect. Q: Querying against a nested entity I'm sure this is a very simple, stupid question, but I can't find an answer. I have two entities in a one-to-many relationship. In SQL, I can just do the following query and I get the result I want: SELECT a.aID, a.bID, a.name, a.otherID, b.name FROM table1 a, table2 b WHERE a.aID = b.aID AND a.otherID =? How can I do this in .NET Entity Framework? (I'm using code-first) A: From your description I'm guessing that a.OtherID is a foreign key in the table1. So something like this might work: From a in Table1s Join b in Table2s on a.OtherID equals b.ID Where a.otherID =? Select new { a.aID, a.bID, a.name, a.OtherID, b.name } Q: For all $x \in [0, 1]$, there exists a $y \in [0, 1]$ such that $x - y \leq \sqrt{x}$ Let $S = \{x \in [0, 1] : x - \sqrt{x} \in [0, 1]\}$. I want to show that S has only two elements, namely 0 and 1 , and prove that this can be done with the least amount of calculations. My attempt: First I'll prove that S is closed, but I don't know how. Another thing, is that I don't know how I can prove that S has only two elements, maybe with the order type lemma. A: Since you are on $S(0, 1)$, you can easily check that $\sqrt{x} = x - \sqrt{x}$. Now, add any other x to the right side and you will get 0 or 1 .
